Here, she found hundreds of vessels waiting for heavy weather to lift before sailing for the U.S. Many boats were unseaworthy, many more operated by inexperienced crews, and almost all grossly overcrowded.

Many near-miracle rescues were made by the McCulloch. By the time the cutter was detached from the Cuban Patrol in late November, she had put in 736 hours underway; conducted 44 assistance cases; removed 437 persons from boats, mostly in "perilous" conditions; escorted 22 vessels; boarded 16; abandoned 11 after removing all persons aboard destroyed seven; repaired 12; towed four, and refueled three.
